“Brilliant! . . . You are a dynamic conduit between research and practice, and that is a vital link.”

Dr. Brenda Brenner, Chair, Music Education, Jacobs School of Music Indiana University - Bloomington

What is it that allows some of us to excel, and others struggle for lesser results? It turns out there are numerous unusual ways which high efficiency learning works. We can add these to the ways we are already teaching and learning to provide continuous accelerated improvement. Very few people figure this out and use it regularly. We call them talented and gifted, and that is how they got that way. Exciting research in psychology and neuroscience identify these elements. These institutes will present hands on demonstrations of accelerated learning in real time, and teach in depth information to form a larger model of learning including deliberate practice, neuroplasticity, teaching focus, mindset, self-control, habit pattern development, and much more that are all any learner needs to reach any goal with motivation and enthusiasm in groups or individually.

“This is an event that will likely change how your students think about learning. A great opportunity that shouldn't be missed.” -Dr. Tim Crist, Professor Theory/Composition and Guitar, Arkansas State University
